Dear Mike,

Hope you are OK. We are having a great holiday here. We arrived in Caernarfon, Wales, four days ago and we are staying in a small hotel in the old town. Yesterday we went to see the castle, and tomorrow we are driving to Snowdonia National Park.

At the moment we are sitting in a café in the city centre after spending a lot of money shopping. In the afternoon, we plan to relax on the beach.

People here are very friendly. They are easy to talk to. The main language here is English but about a twenty per cent of the Welsh can speak both Welsh and English. Next week we are visiting a village that has the longest place name in the world: Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerych -wyrndrobwillantysiliogogoch. Try to say that!

Laura

READ THE TEXT. ARE THE STATEMENTS TRUE OR FALSE?

The ITC, the Independent Television Commission, regulates commercial television in the UK. They make rules for everything: the content of programmes and advertising, the appropriate time to transmit certain materials, the technical quality of transmissions, etc. If broadcasters don't follow ITC rules, they are penalised. The Independent Television Commission also investigates complaints from the audience and publishes the results regularly. Here are some examples:

Three viewers complained about an advertisement for a famous fried chicken restaurant. They said it gave the impression that you received more than three pieces of chicken when you ordered chicken strips and that the container with sauce in the advert was larger than the one they sold in the restaurant.

The ITC decided that the visual content of the advert clearly gave the wrong impression. As a result, the advertiser had to change the image of the sauce container and add a title saying "3 for 2.15 pounds."

Another programme showed people taking extraordinary risks. Once one of them ate six glasses in front of the camera. Six TV viewers complained that children at home might do the same thing.

The ITC considered that the act was clearly presented as something very dangerous and not as something that children should do themselves. Consequently, the ITC decided that there was nothing illegal about the programme.

1. The ITC decides the appropriate time to show some programmes.
2. The ITC keeps its decisions secret.
3. The TV advert for the chicken strips showed more food than you actually got in the restaurant.
4. The advertiser for the chicken restaurant had to change some things in the TV advert.
5. The ITC penalised the broadcasters of the last programme mentioned in the passage.
